

WHAT THEN?

Can anyone deny that unemployment is the key reason for crime, especially robbery?

“What then?”, We all inquire after National Prisoner Foundation’s efforts to release a prisoner.

National Prisoner Foundation (NPF) provided an answer for that question inspired by the saying: “train me how to fish rather than give me a fish every day”

Ladies are the most creative and open-handed segment in society. They are also likely to admit mistakes and return to right path.

As a part of Prisoners Empowerment Project, simultaneously carried out with Insolvent Assistance Project, NPF has trained 70 female prisoners in handicrafts and traditional industry of incense and perfume. Such approach is ideal to help prisoners to modify their ill behaviors.

NPF has also given great importance to juveniles, drawing the smile back in their faces and hoping for better future through training of 20 juvenile prisoners on computer skills.

All these projects that assure NPF successes totally confirm NPF slogan: (A Human! Behind the Bars)

The real human is the one who helps in bringing hopes back and humanly cares about others. There are many who suffer rather than prisoners.

There are kids , wives , fathers and mothers whose lives based on their only breadwinner who placed behind the bars.

Hence, National Prisoner Foundation has sought to add to its credit of successes a project aims to enable the prisoner regardless of age , the necessary skills that will help after release ensuring not return to misbehave.
